

I am very much opposed to allowing the use of cell phones on airborne aircraft. Currently, it is one of the few places where one does not have to be exposed to the rudeness of those who believe that everyone is less important than their need to communicate. Where there might be some legitimate business reasons for cell phone use on aircraft, most cell phone conversations that I hear in public places are not in that category. Most are loud, inane, and could well have waited until the person was home -- if ever.
